studied at close range the men who go mightly for bread. His conclusions tend to destroy a great deal of the sympathy that has been expressed for the men in the famous bread line.

"Some of them are all right," said Mr. Powderly, "and more of them would not work if they had the chance."

"Mr. Powderly's plan to do away with the line and sort out the worthy from the unworthy is for the state to purchase farms and then arrest as vagrants state farms, instead of to penal institu-tions, and there make them work, furnishing them with food, clothing and shelter in proportion to the amount of work they showed a disposition to perform. On their refusal to work Mr. Powderly would have the state turn them over to another department for corrective treatment.
